This publication was created and distributed by Harvard Local, a group of area residents focused on coordinating community-enriching, local actions aimed at decreasing our community's fossil fuel energy usage. By promoting energy conservation and buying locally-grown produce, we aim to invigorate the community and articulate the values we share in carrying on the Nashoba Valley's rich agricultural heritage.

Fresh, Affordable Local Produce

Farmstands Around Harvard, MA

- Eat the freshest produce you can buy
- Protect local farmland from development
- Meet others in your community
- Teach your children to value local agriculture

Before you buy all your food in grocery store chains, this growing season, why not stop at a local farm stand on the way? When you add locally grown produce to your table you get the freshest food and you help local farms and farmers thrive.

Buying local saves resources

Most food we buy comes from far away places—1,500 miles on average. When you buy local produce, you help stop delegating food production to far away farms, reducing the enormous energy resources it takes to deliver our food to stores. It may not seem like much, but when growing numbers of people buy locally grown produce, it cools the hot air balloon of rising energy costs.

We all benefit when you buy local

When we all directly participate in the food distribution system, we help re-establish the local food supply that vanished with the onset of a cheap, seemingly endless supply of oil. This season, join the fun, meet your neighbors and enjoy a growing movement.

Make 2006 the year you start to buy tasty and nutritious food grown locally!!
